

ALEXANDRIA, VA.

FRIDAY, JUNE 9, 1871.

Gen. W. B. Montgomery, who died recently, in Bristol, Pa., was about 70 years of age. He served in the Florida and Mexican wars. During the late war he was, at one period, U. S. Military Governor of Alexandria-and was generally considered to be one of the most humane and least exacting and tyrannical of the government officials who figured in this city. Contrasted with some of them he will be favorably remembered. He was a regular army officer, educated at West Point, and recognized as a brave soldier-and our people had a better orinion of him than they could possibly have of his successors in office. He was often powerless to prevent the atrocities which were frequently perpetrated, but he protected from wrong where he could, and had to obey the orders of others which directed him to allow wrong doings. He resigned his commission in 1864 and retired to private life.

Horace Greeley is now writing letters about the South. He says that it is evident the peocomplaint is that labor is not properly carried for damages. on by the blacks-that the women of the South have suffered most from emancipation—that the Southern people will endeavor to effect through regular elections a restoration of their civil and political rights, in opposition to the present dominant faction, &c., &c. There is nothing character of jurors so long as intelligent memvery important in the "exposition." The reason that we think so, may be that we do not think Mr. Greeley is "the guide, philosopher and friend" that many suppose he is.

Tweed, the New York man, now "a charac ter," and made more notorious lately by a wed ding at his residence, it is said, was povertystricken until he went into politics as a business and since then he has worked it with such success as now to be worth millions. It isn't every body that "strikes oil in polities"-but, still, many do. Among the qualities for success the prominent one is "cheek"--which means impudence-often accompanied with ignorance and vulgarity.

Mr. Horace Greeley. He says the water is so bad that the excuse for drinking bad coffee and worse whiskey is justifiable. Texas, he says, wants ten million panes of glass and ten thousand glaziers to set them. It wants fifty thou-Houston and Galveston. He adds that there are a hundred such enterprises waiting men to develope them.

"how to be comfortable in these hot days," has a reminiscence "of the good but slow old times in Virginia of stage coaches when country inns abounded. It was delightful to retreat to them for a few days and live upon new-laid eggs, fresh milk, fresh butter, fresh vegetables, sweet country-made biscuits and bread, and fat fowls. The railroads have broken up these inus, and that resource is gone, it is feared, forever.

Gen. Grant, in one of his late "interviews'. is reported as advocating the policy of conciliation towards the Indians. He said:-"The policy of peace, sir, is much preferable to the policy of war. You can't thrash people so that District Court of Alabama. they will love you, even though they are Indians. You, however, make enemies friendly by kindness." Very true. But then why not of an overflow of water. apply the doctrine to white men as well as Indians-to the South, as well as the Far West?

Brownlow has lately been "interviewed." He is very feeble. His conversation was not interesting or important. Strange to say, he thinks Andrew Johnson has some good traits hardly worth cutting. and is incorrupt, and incorruptible. Whatever else, said he, Johnson may be, he is an honest man. He believes in Grant, and predicts that Grant will be re-elected.

There seems to be a growing disposition to-England and the non-conformists. It does not take the form of any desire to unite the churches under one church government, but of a wider charity, and a more open acknowledgment of whatever good there is in each.

It is said that as far as he expresses any political opinions, Chief Justice Chase is in favor of the Democratic platform adopted in Pennsylvania and Ohio, generally, and if in Ohio, at the Gubernatorial election will vote for Gen. McCook, the Democratic candidate.
